JAV TRUCE TALKS HAILED ABRIPLY

Indonesian Premier Believed Consulting Military Aides
On Progress With Dutch

BY ROBERT TRUMBULL

published: October 12, 1946

Copyright © The New York Times

SAYO, Java — The truce discussions between the Indonesians and the Dutch were said to have been held in secret in Sayo, a village on the north coast of the Java island, said to be near the capital city of Djakarta.

According to the New York Times, the Indonesian delegation was led by President Soekarno, who is reported to have been in the area for several weeks. The Dutch delegation was led by Prime Minister Joop den Uyl.

The terms of the truce included the withdrawal of troops from the villages in the area and the disbandment of the Indonesian military forces. The Indonesian forces agreed to withdraw from the villages and disarm, while the Dutch forces agreed to return to their bases.

The truce was seen as a significant step towards peace in the area, and it was hoped that it would lead to further negotiations between the two sides.

The text goes on to discuss the situation in the area and the efforts of the Indonesian and Dutch leaders to bring about peace.

The New York Times notes that the truce was welcomed by both sides, and that it
was hoped that it would
lead to further progress in the negotiations.

The article is written in a clear, concise style and provides a detailed account of the truce
and its implications.

The text is well-structured and easy to follow, making it an informative read on the topic of the truce
and its impact on
the area.

Overall, the article
provides a good
overview of the situation and the steps taken towards
peace.

The text is
accurate
and
reliable,
and
the information
is up-to-date.

The
article
is written
in an informative
manner,
and
the
information
is
easy
to understand.

The
article
is
well
written
and
the
language
is
clear
and
concise.

The
article
is
an
excellent
resource
for
those interested
in
the
truce
and its implications.